X-Ray Eyes... "Believe it when you see it"

Shmoo are back with X-Ray Eyes.... A masterpiece of synth laden and hook-ridden electronic wizardry with hidden messages and meanings.... where again we see the bands music and videos heavily entwined.

Music..

X-Ray Eyes incorporates classic traits which u would come to expect from the Shmoo brothers. There is a hard hitting analog punch that is apparent straight from the off, which not only throws you back to the 80s but also catapults you bang up to date. Subtle jazz undertones which hints at Jamiroquai and some early Acid Jazz / 90's Trip-Hop, are pitched against a hard hitting 00s Mark Ronson style dance production with Obligatory Moogs a plenty.

Video..

Forming a direct sequel to the "Head To Toe" music video, this time "X-ray Eyes" (again written and directed by Shmoo themselves) Robots are pitched against Humans, which points at a dystopian future not too dissimilar to Blade Runner. The band now find themselves in a "Virtual Reality" simulator, with nods to CGI classics "Lawn Mower man" and "The Matrix", and comes at a fitting time before the release of Spielberg's "Ready Player 1". After now awaking from Cryogenic sleep, Shmoo lyrically ask "Is it a great day for the human race when we can freeze ourselves and wake immortalised?" Only time will tell....!
